Summary of Reference

MEMO 65763, Dated 21 December 1964

1. The thinking reflected in Reference is certainly valid, and we could not agree more than we do that any individual assigned a scientific candidate to succeed STILSTY is well worth an appropriate evaluation effort by KUBARK.

2. In point of fact, Subject is not someone who has been entirely ignored during his stay in the Headquarters area. In fact, as you might well assume, well known to [] and he is also known, although less well, by []. [] mentioned that he appended a note to the recent Christmas card he mailed to Subject and his wife, something along the lines that his very first New Year's resolution would be to see more of Subject than he has been able to do of late. Subject responded to this friendly sentiment with alacrity by calling [] up a couple of days later to invite him to dinner, which invitation [] was compelled to decline regretfully although with the assurance that the two families would certainly get together soon after the turn of the year. [] has every intention of following up on this assurance, and it should prove relatively easy for Subject also to engage in a modest celebration of the Subject over the coming months. We might also note that on the occasion of his recent check-in visit to Headquarters, [] seized the opportunity to have lunch with Subject.

1. On the whole, [] considers Subject to be an intelligently pro-PEPRIME official, whose basically friendly feelings are, of course, by no means undiscriminating or of such nature as to override his proper fundamental loyalty to his own country or - were he to become Chief of CATTIE - to that organization. In any event, we will make the effort to keep in touch with him at an appropriate level, so that his tie to KUBARK does not atrophy. The undersigned might note that despite his personal willingness to fry fish at the National Theater or Corporation Hall, he would probably not be well suited for such a role vis-a-vis Subject. For one thing, Subject could quickly identify [] as someone below his level in the power structure, and he would undoubtedly be more readily to identify him as the working-level KUBARK contact with Alvin Hansen. According to [], there is an great love lost between Subject and Alvin Hansen, and it might be that this fact would place [] at an even greater disadvantage in Subject's eyes than he would otherwise have.
